A Time of Transition

The early United States was a time of great transition. The country was rapidly growing and changing, and the way people dressed reflected this. ## The Influence of Europe

The fashion of Jeffersonian America was heavily influenced by Europe. The wealthy elite often imported the latest fashions from Paris and London. However, even the working class was influenced by European trends. For example, the popularity of the frock coat in America was due in part to its popularity in Europe.

Regional Differences

There were also significant regional differences in dress in Jeffersonian America. In the North, the climate was colder, and people tended to dress more warmly.
