The Front Line Perspective

The front line is where businesses interact with their customers, suppliers, and other stakeholders. It is the point of contact where customer needs are identified, problems are solved, and relationships are built. Front-line employees have a unique perspective on the business because they are in the trenches, dealing with the day-to-day challenges and opportunities.

Jane Doe spent years interviewing and observing front-line employees in a variety of industries. She found that they have a deep understanding of the customer's needs, the strengths and weaknesses of the business, and the changes that are needed to succeed in the future.
