Sandel identifies two main approaches to justice: the utilitarian approach and the deontological approach. The utilitarian approach focuses on the consequences of our actions. We should do whatever will produce the greatest good for the greatest number of people. The deontological approach, on the other hand, focuses on the duties that we have to others. We should do what is right, even if it means sacrificing our own interests.

Sandel argues that neither the utilitarian nor the deontological approach is always right. Sometimes, we must weigh the consequences of our actions against our duties to others. Other times, we must simply make a judgment call about what is the right thing to do.

Sandel's book is a thought-provoking and challenging exploration of the nature of justice. He does not provide easy answers, but he does help us to think more clearly about the issues involved. Justice: What Is the Right Thing to Do? is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the pursuit of justice.
