Excerpt from Chapter 1: My Early Life

I was born in Temple, Texas, in 1911. My parents were sharecroppers, and we lived in poverty. I had to work hard from a young age, picking cotton and doing other chores. I didn't get much schooling, but I learned to read and write.

When I was 16, I met Clyde Barrow. He was a handsome and charming young man, and I was immediately drawn to him. We started dating, and soon we were in love.

Clyde was a bit of a rebel, and he didn't like to work. He wanted to live a life of excitement and adventure. I was more cautious, but I was also drawn to his sense of adventure. We decided to run away together, and we started robbing banks and stores.

Our life of crime was short-lived. We were caught by the police after a few months, and we were sentenced to prison. I served two years in prison, and Clyde served four years. When we were released, we decided to start over. We moved to Dallas, and we got jobs as factory workers.

But we couldn't stay out of trouble. Clyde was restless, and he always wanted to be on the move. We started robbing banks again, and soon we were back on the run from the police.

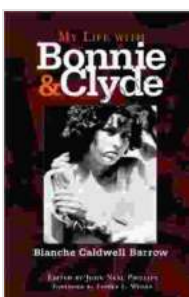

Our life of crime came to an end in May 1934, when we were ambushed by the police. Clyde was killed instantly, and I was seriously injured. I was arrested and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

I served seven years in prison, and I was released in 1941. I have lived a quiet life since then. I have never forgotten Bonnie and Clyde, and I still think about them often. They were the loves of my life, and I will never forget them.
